

Abbey Road allotment site; storm damage from earlier in the week; one of the polytunnel covers was ruined, covers had been on for eight years!

The green team (learning difficulties) came down the plot this morning to assess the damage. A few tears!

When they had gone I got half the buried tunnel sides out (knackered) were put in good! This morning I rung a tunnel company up and told them what had happened and if they could help them out, they said yes email me all the details, I did, hopefully they can help us out, told them I would give their name good coverage! No reply yet, when/if I do then I will name the company

My late leeks and onions in the loft are doing well, quite pleased with these

My shallots in the cold end of the greenhouse are also doing well, these are getting a spray of Shield Bac-off (for mould and bacteria). These will be going out next week hopefully

A week since the last photo, sprouts still standing up and my three now starting to also dry out!

Not much wood chip left on site, still enough for what I want it for

And that's to fill the bottom of a replaced raised bed, ideal, a natural product

A new ingredient for my compost! Another natural product, saw dust, timber used was untreated so I know it's good

West Midlands District Association of the NVS had their AGM last week, same committee, near enough. We then had Graham Wagstaffe give us a talk on exhibition carrots, a good talk it went down well...a few on hols plus naff weather had a turn out of 26, 4 of these were new members, 2 joined on the night

5th raised bed nearly done, another board added plus some top soil from the next old bed along

Last week, the farmer next to our allotment site was muck spreading, this week he is ploughing it all in...with seagulls in attendance!
